

"View From My Window" by Pastor Everhart

I drag a large spool used for wire home the other day that I found in the dumpster wondering if I might not make it useful. As it turns out my wife had seen a picture of a spool on Pinterest turned into a little table on wheels filled with children's books and when she saw my spool my next day off's project was decided. I cut and drilled, added spindles, antiqued the finish and added wheels. Setting it in the middle of the living room I saw an all too familiar look in my wife's eyes. It was that "that's not what I had in mind" look. That's what the one posted on Pinterest looks like, I thought. "What if you cut it down a little, it looks too tall." Next chance I got I cut it down and had to agree it looked better. Wheeling it back into the living room I noticed that same displeased look returning to my wife's face. "I could add a few more spindles," I suggested. "Try that," she said. Three hours later I brought the project in once more fearing that perhaps this one was just going back into the dumpster. I watched as the I don't think so look faded and a this has possibilities expression took its place. Later I overheard her tell her mother over the phone that, "it turned out really nice"! It looks better than my first offering and although it's frustrating to have someone displeased with my work it's actually necessary for bringing better work out of me. I may not have said, "Thank you for not being easily pleased" to my wife but I was thinking it.
