THE VIEW FROM MY WINDOW

I'm a list guy. I start my days in the office making a checklist of the tasks I hope to accomplish that day. My favorite thing about having a list is checking off items as I complete them. Sometimes my list will include items that need done outside the church (i.e. visit someone in a hospital or pick up some office supplies) which I usually do at the end of my work day. I never check those items off my agenda until they're complete so I find my "uncompleted" itinerary sitting on my desk the next morning. Looking it over I will check off those items I finished before throwing the list away.

I found out I'm not the only person that does this. Why would anyone bother to complete a form before throwing it away? Maybe no job is truly complete until it's "checked off." When you do something kind for someone else & they fail to say "thank you" you notice it. You didn't do what you did to get a "thank you" but its absence is strangely felt.

All who serve the Lord will one day hear, "Well done thou good & faithful servant." Suddenly our lives will feel complete. Our tasks will all be done. Our hearts & minds will rest. Oh happy day.
