The View
From My Window
WITH PASTOR JOEL

After three days of ignoring the tire pressure light on my dashboard, I finally said, "Enough with excuses I need to take care of this." I pulled into my usual gas station & up to their faithful air dispenser happy that no one was using it. In short order my tire had less air in it than when I started. On to the next gas station ...

There was someone using that pump. I sit & wait while the clock in my head is ticking & I review the list of things I could be getting done if only I wasn't just sitting & waiting.

Obviously I'm not still there waiting to inflate my tires; in fact, it really didn't take long at all. Why do waiting moments seem so much longer than doing moments? In this new year may all your moments bring you closer to the One who holds every tick on your clock.
